As part of the Jackling Introduction to Engineering Camp, high school students interested in Geological Engineering were invited to an afternoon float down a section of the Gasconade River, and to learn a little bit about what Geological Engineers do.

First stop, a gravel point bar

For lunch and

For a swim…
Trip route

Photo locations

Students measuring water quality
Floating down the river

Some students were experienced canoeists

Some were not
Profiling the stream cross section