Some of the views of Peru were magnificent, in this picture you see some of the terraces made by the Inca, they have been destroyed by time but are still visible.

Here we have a overlook of Cuzco, you can see the entirety of the valley even with the fog rolling in.
This is Saqsayhuaman, the first Incan site we visited, the blocks in the walls here are the biggest used in

Across the valley from the ruins is a really good example of glacial striations, the locals use it as a slide, and in our case it was a waterslide.
This is one of the more impressive Incan sites that we saw. At this point there was near 1000 ft drop in elevation from the top to bottom.

Just to show the size of this project these are people working on one of the walls.
Here are a couple pictures from our day in Machu Pichu
Some of the wildlife we saw in Peru
And then there was this

Obviously there are some differences in culture.
