Religious Areas of Peru

Cathedral in Cuzco: Largest Cathedral We Saw. Almost everywhere we went you had to pass it.

Same cathedral but taken from a cliff in Saqsaywaman.

Large side view of a statue of Jesus. Taken from a cliff in Saqsaywaman.

A sign from God? Just kidding, though it is neat that the Jesus statue is under a double rainbow. Arrow points to the second rainbow, in case you can't see it.

There is no mortar holding the stones together. This indicates this place as a religious site. On a side note, the dog really wanted in the photo. This is still in Saqsaywaman.

Impressive doorway. You can even see the rainbow.

Water Temple. Both religious and functional.

Sign Speaks for itself. The church has many murals inside. No pictures were allowed inside.

Monastery attached to the previous church.

Three crosses in the courtyard of the church. A nice representation of the crucifixion even if it is slightly out of context.

Shows how perfectly 3 adjacent temples were lined up. Amazing. An interesting point is that the three temples look almost identical.

The temples are in the courtyard of the Spanish Cathedral.

Our guide Fidel on a sacrificial alter. Demonstrating the position the human sacrifices were mummified in.

Remains of the sacrifices were found in this natural crevice.
